"Making a bedroom a home."

Choosing a bedside table

Supporting safety, independence, and comfort in everyday living

Selecting the right bedside table in an aged care environment is about more than furniture—it plays a vital role in resident safety, accessibility, and quality of life.

A well-designed bedside table keeps essential items within reach, supports independence, and contributes to a warm, homely environment.

Key Considerations

Safety First

Rounded corners reduce the risk of injury, particularly for residents with mobility challenges or cognitive impairment. Avoid sharp edges wherever possible.

Correct Height for Adjustable Beds

Most aged care facilities use Hi-Lo or Lo-Lo beds, making bedside height critical.

Bedside tables should align with the resident's preferred bed height to ensure easy and safe access.

Practical Storage Options

Storage needs vary depending on the resident and room setup. Consider:

Drawers for personal items

Open shelving for books or frequently used items

Cupboards for slippers or clothing

A combination of storage types often provides the best outcome.

Additional Functionality

Features such as a slide-out breakfast tray provide valuable extra surface space for meals, drinks, and activities—especially when the tabletop is already in use.

Privacy and Security

In line with aged care standards, residents should have access to a secure space for personal belongings.

Lockable drawers or compartments support privacy, dignity, and peace of mind.

Durability for Daily Use

Bedside tables must be built to withstand frequent use and regular cleaning.

Durable, easy-clean materials ensure longevity and consistent performance.

Creating a Homely Environment

Furniture plays a key role in how a room feels.

Bedside tables should complement other furnishings and contribute to a warm, comfortable, and familiar space.

Material Selection

Laminate: Durable, cost-effective, and easy to maintain with modern woodgrain finishes

Solid Timber: Greater design flexibility with a premium, residential feel

Both options can be tailored to suit aged care environments.

Designed for Better Living

The right bedside table enhances daily life—supporting safety, independence, and comfort while helping residents feel truly at home.
